Editor's comment

Dear readers,

As an editor of Revista Mexicana de Anestesiología, I have the great pleasure to personally inform you that the quality, content and periodicity of our Journal has made it possible for it to be included in the search engine, Google Academic, and in the indice Copernicus, which, in fact, gave a high score to our Journal. This represents an indicator of excellent quality. With this achievement, our official medium for scientific dissemination now is available worldwide. This certainly will increase the number of journal consultations, which in turn will ensure that the scientific works of Mexican anesthesiologists reaches a higher number of readers.

To complement the achievements of our Journal, I would like to personally inform you that starting this year, the Revista Mexicana de Anestesiología, will be fully translated into English. This represents a landmark for Mexican anesthesia and for our Journal because, as you well know, English is the language that most scientists use to communicate throughout the world. Thanks to this great effort and important accomplishment, the impact of published articles will increase. I am sure that this will serve to advance us toward my personal goal to include the Journal in the National Library of Medicine and, subsequently, in Current Contents. This will serve as the platform for reaching the long-term goal of having an impact factor and being included in the international citation index. I also would like to remind you that the Journal currently is in the Latin American citation index.

Serving as the editor of Revista Mexicana de Anestesiología is one of the most important honors I have had during my professional life. I am truly committed to dedicating time, effort and resources to take the Journal to new levels and ensuring that it meets the highest standards.

Sincerely,

Raúl Carrillo Esper, MD
Chief Medical Editor
