The value of sharing

Jaime Vázquez-Torres, M.D.*

* President. Colegio Mexicano de Anestesiología, A.C.

*“Words are not mere auxiliaries of the mind
but necessary signs of our ideas, not only to speak, but also to think.”
Gaspar Melchor de Jovellanos*

Continuing medical education requires self-discipline and rigorous training of knowledge through knowledge and success, which can be achieved by cultivating the life of the mind, starting from understanding, discernment and reason.

The written word must be clean, diaphanous and firm in order to achieve in the reader the impulse of congruence between thinking and doing through language, in learning to learn and learning to think. Imagination and creativity are encouraged in the field of work and research under the clarification of values and professional training.

In this space, the Colegio Mexicano de Anestesiología, A.C. facilitates interaction with the teachers of the XLV Updating Course in Anesthesiology and Perioperative Medicine, which represents the result of the concerns and perspectives that move the person to continue on the path of shared knowledge to close the teaching-learning cycle.

It is an opportunity to have arguments of evidence in the decision making, before the person who requires the anesthetic procedure in a humanistic framework to which are integrated the theoretical-practical, technological and educational advances, which contribute to achieve a quality care with security, both for the patient and for the health team.

This extension of the daily work of those who have experience in anesthesia conduction and who generously give fulfillment to complementarity, commitment and communication, remains in their hands, putting within our reach the ideas in the Mexican Journal of Anesthesiology, which is a conduit of motivation and development of critical thinking.
